We are constantly posting articles, videos, pictures, and much more about the gas industry. Just for a quick example: Fun fact of the day: William Hart dug the first natural gas well in the U.S. outside Fredonia, New York, in 1821. The well was about 27 feet deep compared to today's wells which can run more than 30,000 feet deep.

If you like videos, check out "Turning Natural Gas Into Liquid".

We have others that might be more to your liking. What about: "How Natural Gas is Bringing Back Jobs to America" or "Life of an Onshore Well: Finding and Producing Tight or Shale Gas and Oil". We are the perfect place for you. Especially when you don't have time to surf the net for yourself but you still want to be kept informed.

Another fun fact: Besides being a heating fuel, natural gas has other cool uses such as chilling the glycol used to produce ice for hockey and skating rinks. I'm sure many hockey players and fans would stand up and cheer for "gas" if they knew that interesting tidbit.

While you're surfing on your computer we hope you will also visit our website: www.rllco.com Our natural gas chart integration and processing services are the best. Check us out.

We are constantly trying to stay on top of the news. Use us as one of your references for keeping yourself informed.
